Since Slavica and Bernie got a divorce, he has gotten more than $500 million from the trust fund of his ex-wife. It is a very strange place to live. Instead of the billionaire paying off his ex-girlfriend, it looks like she is giving him about $100 million a year. Given how his finances are set up, it's not that surprising that his divorce settlement is set up in an unusual way.

Ecclestone's assets were moved into the name of Slavica when he was sick with a bad heart in the late 1990s. In 1999, he had a triple bypass. If he had died, 40% of the money he would have left to his daughters as an inheritance would have gone to British death duties. Ecclestone has a net worth in the billions, but his ex-wife holds the deeds and powers of attorney to some of his assets. Because of this, the courts thought she was the wealthier person and ordered her to pay Ecclestone $100 million per year.
